

Dr. Sara Carazo Perez

Graduated as family medicine in Spain, with a long experience in humanitarian medicine with the NGO Médecins Sans Frontières, Dr. Sara Carazo Perez also holds a master's degree in public health as well as a doctorate in epidemiology. She has worked as an epidemiologist since 2018 in Quebec City, and since the start of the COVID-19 pandemic, she has focused her research at the INSPQ on the effectiveness of the vaccine against COVID-19 and carried out epidemiological surveys among health care workers. She is responsible for the epidemiological survey to evaluate the frequency and sequelae linked to the post-COVID-19 syndrome (or long COVID) in healthcare workers, which began in 2023.
